

Summary of Lincoln Park Community Impact Measurement Report prepared in 2016

Introduction

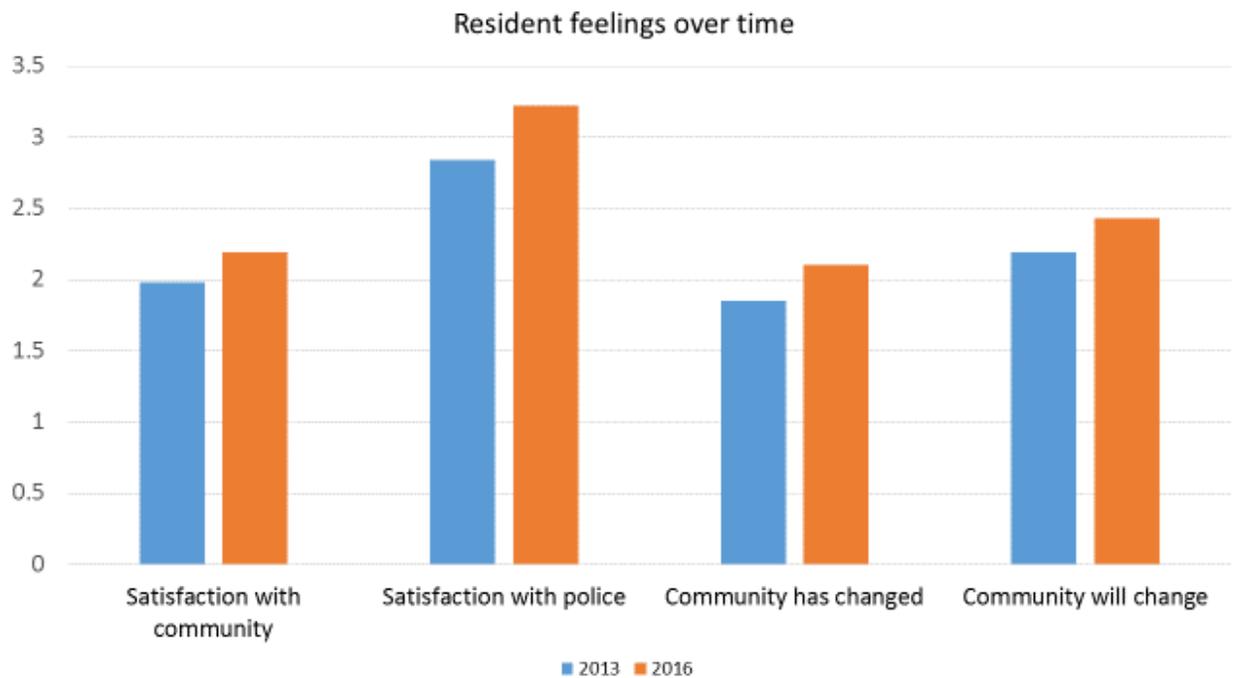

Two different information sources were examined for this report. The first source had to do with how residents felt about the community they lived in and this information was gathered by having people knock on doors in the target area (pictured below) and giving people a survey that asked questions about feelings of safety and satisfaction living in their neighborhood, among other things. The second source had to do with the general observed conditions of everything from buildings to street conditions within the target area and this was gathered by having people score conditions on a standardized scale. Data was collected on both resident feelings and observed conditions in both 2013 and 2016. The full report looks at the results of the 2016 survey alone as well as differences from surveys conducted in 2013 compared to 2016. This summary report will only focus on differences that were found from 2013 to 2016.

Note: Pages were spaced such that text would appear on same page as accompanying graph.

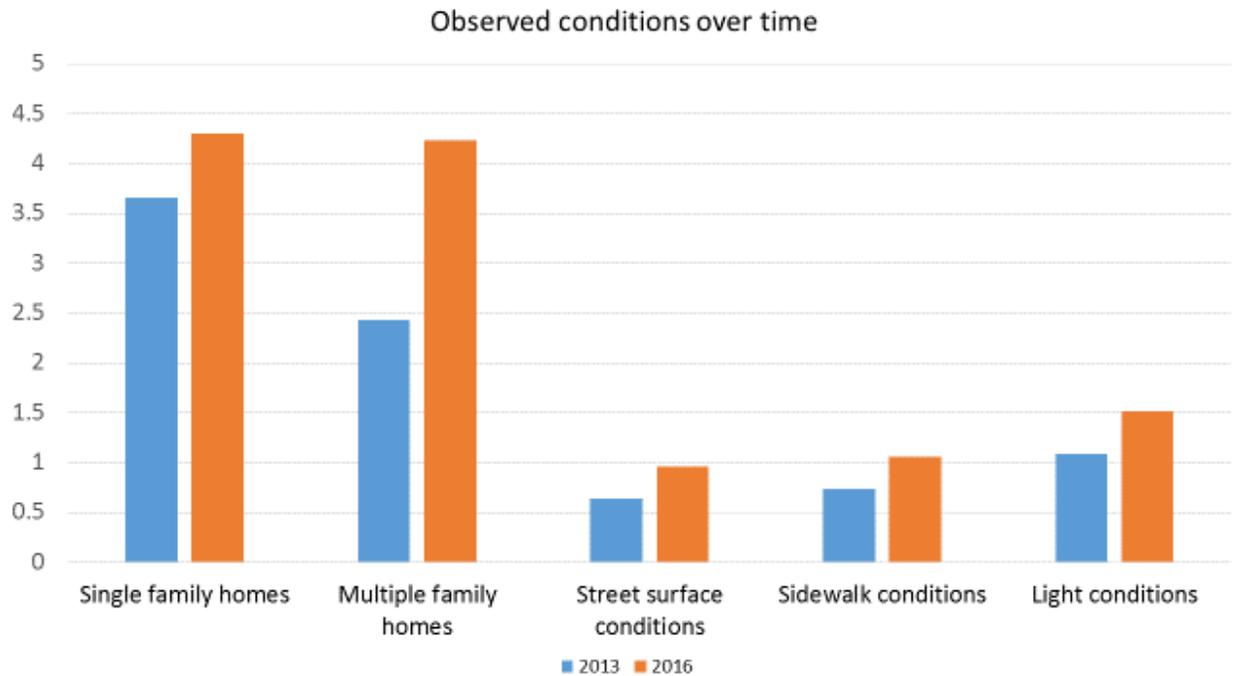

Resident feelings about their community from 2013 to 2016

In 2013, 200 responses were gathered and in 2016, 234 responses were gathered to find out how people felt about the community that they lived in. The change from 2013 to 2016 was encouraging. It showed us that a difference was being made, but that there was still work to do. Please note for the chart that is below that higher scores are better and also that while the “satisfaction with police,” “community has changed,” and the “community will change” questions could potentially have a score as high as a ‘4,’ the satisfaction with community question could only have a score as high as a ‘3.’ While these changes do not appear to be large when looking at them at a glance, they are fairly significant increases when considering how many people were asked in both 2013 and 2016. For further details and context, please see the full report.

Observed conditions from 2013 to 2016

In both 2013 and 2016, every single block within the target area was observed and the total number of blocks was 105. Here too, the change from 2013 to 2016 was encouraging and also tells us a similar story to the resident feelings information: a difference has been made, but there is still work to do. Please note for the chart that is below that while the building conditions (single and multiple) could score as high as a '5,' the infrastructure (street, sidewalk, lighting) conditions could only score as high as a '2.' Again, higher scores are better and the same context as above applies here to the observed magnitude of the change. More detail and context is available in the full report.

Conclusion

According to the available data, the Lincoln Park target area has seen some improvement from 2013 to 2016. Lincoln Park will continue to be an area in which 1 Roof Housing, in collaboration with other organizations, shall continue to focus special attention.
